

WHITBY

INTRODUCTION: Burke's account confuses two separate families. The Great Haywood family originate in Cheshire whilst the Lichfield family seem to originate in Staffordshire. I am grateful to Guy Hirst for supplying information which has enabled me to compile the following account. He, in turn, acknowledges the researches of Louis Knafla.

WHITBY OF GREAT HAYWOOD IN COLWICH, STAFFS

ARMS: Gules three snakes coiled ---- on a chief or three pheons sable (*1680) [PLOT]; Gules three serpents proper on a chief of the second or as many pheons heads sable [BLG 1847] [NOTE: Arms are noted on the Funeral Certificates of 1622 and 1625]

CREST: A pheon in pale piercing a serpent [BLG 1847]

The family who bear this name, variously written Whitbie, Whitbe, Whitbye, Whitebey, and Whitby, believed originally to have migrated from Whitby, in Yorkshire, (whence came their appellation and arms, which contain, besides three pheons' heads, three "Whitby stones") have been settled in the co. Stafford for a considerable period; as on the occasion of a dispute between the Bishop of Lichfield and Sir John Aston, concerning the title of Hereditary Master and Kuler of the Game of Cannock Chase, we find, among many others, as Edward Lord Dudley; Abbot of Crokesden; John Mitton, sheriff of the county; William Wolseley, &c, the name of William Whitbie, annexed to a deed in favour of Sir John Aston, purporting to be a certificate from the principal gentry of Staffordshire, 11 Henry VII in 1495. Jane Whitby c as of Shugborough 23 Sep 1590 Colwich; m 28 Apr 1608 Heston, Middx: William Atkinson

Thomas Whitbie, (probably the grandson of William,) b. in 1530, had, on the atteint of William, Lord Paget, 26 Elizabeth , a grant passed under the great seal of England, of the "site of the manor of Haywood and Shutborowe, with the edifices and void lands, where edifices were formerly built, within the precinct, walk, and circuit of the said site," &c, for a lease of three lives, his own and his two sons, John and Thomas, in succession, rendering one hundred pounds a year of lawful monies.

The rent was, temp. 45 Elizabeth, reduced to forty pounds a year. Thomas Whitbie served on the jury that condemned Sir Walter Raleigh in 1603, as armiger, consisting of four knights, four squires, or armigeri, and four gentlemen. By his wife, Jane, (who was buried at Colwich, 12 Nov. 1592,) he had three sons and one dau. [viz:] (1) John, his heir; (2) Thomas, m. 22 May, 1592, Ursula Alley. He acted as magistrate for the co. of Stafford in 1620, d. about 1640. (3) Antony, who, through his son Robert, b. 22 Dec 1604, was grandfather of Oliver Whitbie, canon-residentary of Chichester Cathedral in 1664, and archdeacon of that diocese in 1670. By his wife, Ann, he had six children. (1) Jane. [BLG] Thomas Whitbie d. in 1616, when these leaseholds reverted to the crown, as we find James I., in the 11th year of his reign, granting the fee-simple of these same lands to William Whitmore and Jonas Verdon, though in the 18th year of the same reign, John Whitby, the heir of Thomas Whitbie, bought them back again, (with the exception of the site of Shutborowe.)

Benjamin Victor, a theatrical manager, wrote an account of Anna Northey's life entitled THE WIDOW OF THE WOOD (1755) which SIMMS states was "An account of one of the most extraordinary of women in history, for her utter disregard of all decency [her last husband] Mr. Hargrave, Attorney - father of the Editor of the State Trials - who bought up and destroyed all the copies he could obtain. Elsewhere it is said that the Wolseley family bought up copies.

WHITBY OF DUNSTON IN PENKRIDGE, STAFFS

ARMS:

CREST:

The other half of the manor, held by John Barbour in 1598, (fn. 96) was granted by him to Hugh Whitby of Rickerscote (in Castle Church) in 1602. (fn. 97) After Hugh's death the moiety passed to his son John, who, in pursuance of a trust reposed in his father, conveyed a half of this moiety to Thomas Spokes, otherwise Whitby, of Dunston in 1612. (fn. 98) A William Whitby and others in 1641 settled this quarter of the manor with lands in Dunston on Thomas Whitby the younger, (fn. 99) whose son and heir George seems to have held half the manor in 1725. (fn. 100) Thomas son of George was succeeded in 1744 by his niece Ann Whitby, who as Ann Parker, widow, sold half the manor of Dunston to George Anson in 1788. (fn. 101) [VCH]
